

Trimming Beards

If your beard has a sharp definition, and you shave the other areas of your face clean, a trimmer may make the process a little easier.

Use the trimmer to sharpen the definition before shaving. You probably can feel where the outline is, even if you have some stubble growth around it.

Follow these steps:

- Put the trimmer blade against your skin, just a little in front of the beard outline.
- As you move the blade toward the outline, you may hear some stubble being clipped, and you may feel the clipping action. But when you get to the edge of the outline, where the hair is heavier, the cutting sound will change. The vibration of the shaver will change, too: It is now encountering more resistance. This lets you know you are at the edge of the outline.
- Trimming some of the stubble around the edge of your beard helps make the border stand out more. You'll then have an easier boundary to follow when shaving.
